

Kneebody clinics have been met with wide acclaim and taken place at such schools as the Eastman School of Music, University of Michigan, California Institute of the Arts (CalArts), University of California at Los Angeles (UCLA), University of Nevada at Reno, Bennington College, Denver University, and New York City's School for Improvisational Music, etc.

Kneebody is available for clinics, residencies and interactive performances with students and school ensembles. Referrals and testimonials upon request.

Clinic topics include:

- Approaches to composing and arranging original music
- Kneebody's improvisational language, including their complex system of musical cues
- Developing, maintaining and evolving a personal sound and approach to music
- Making the transition from student musician to professional musician
- Developing a career that is both creative and practical in today's scene